

By using simple chemical evolution models, we discuss the contribution of astrophysical sources, including massive stars of different initial rotating velocities, to the chemical enrichment and the impact of individual events on abundance ratios of dwarf galaxies. In the talk, I would like to talk about our study based on a published paper and/or questions that arise in the program.